

The Department of Semiotics of Tartu University is conducting a research on the subject of success of the masters program (for foreign students) when a tuition fee is introduced. Participating in the research will take about 5 minutes of your time and would be very valued by the Department of Semiotics of Tartu University.

University of Tartu, which was founded in 1632, is Estonia's leading center of research and training. As Estonia's national university, UT stresses the importance of international co-operation and partnerships with reputable research universities all over the world. An international MA program in Semiotics was launched in 2009/2010 and won the title of "cool curricula". Students come from all around the world (Mexico, Turkey, USA, Italy, Ukraine etc), creating a truly interesting studying environment. The main research subjects are semiotics of culture, theoretical semiotics, semiotics of translation, ecosemiotics and biosemiotics.

A link to the research can be found here: <http://www.surveygizmo.com/s3/310267/Tartu-University-s->. Further information on the Department of Semiotics and University of Tartu can be found on the links below. <http://www.ut.ee/SOSE/eng.html>

All of your answers are strictly anonymous and would be used for research only. Thank you for your cooperation!